

Abraham Lincoln . . .

. . . would have saved the union
without ending slavery had he been able to,
but found that the North
could not win the war
without an emancipation proclamation.

Real revolution, you see—
just like poetry—
is not an option.
It must be our compulsion.

Steve Bloom
May 2003