

The Disobedient Child

“How many times have I told you not to bolt down your food?” scolded the mother, as her mischievous child slipped the washer on, threaded the nut, and tightened it—first with fingers and then her wrench—until the plate of stew was well secured to the dinner table.

Steve Bloom
May 2001