

Universal Language

In every tongue the people hang pictures of flowers on their walls—alone, or else allowed to sprawl through meadows with trees and sky and water.

They put real ones, cut, where we can see in vases, on tables, or potted and alive in sunny window sills.

Steve Bloom (in Germany)
November 2000