

What I Learned from the 2020 Presidential Election

Oh—and the previous one too,
and others going back as far as I can remember:

That it's like they taught me in elementary school.
Anyone can grow up to be President
of the United States.
Think of it: In 2016
we even elected a clown to be President of the United States. My teachers weren't kidding, I guess, when they said "anyone."

What my teachers didn't tell me, however,
is that the clown may have a harder time
getting re-elected to a second term.

Still, it's nice to know.

Another thing they didn't tell me:
Whether the President of the USA
is named "Donald" or "Joe," or "Hillary,"
"Barack" or "Mitt," "Al" or "George"—
perhaps even "Kamala" if we anticipate the future a bit—
(you can see where I am going with this, yes?)
the empire wins every time.

What's up with that?

The empire won again on Tuesday, November 3rd, 2020.
Interesting, wouldn't you agree?
The empire is, in fact,
on a 59-game winning streak,
spanning the last 230-plus years.

Perhaps it's time for us to start paying attention?
