

Window

This poem, unlike some,
is not a window.
It is an unbroken brick wall—
too high to look over
even if you jump.
Listen and it will surround you,
obscuring everything outside itself,
yourself.

A world remains beyond,
which you no longer see.
Welcome to another
which now you share with me.

Steve Bloom
January 2003